Ranaz transfers nutritional bar production from BarTech to St-Eustache

- Estimated annual savings of $500,000
- Company to receive nearly $200,000 in non-refundable financial assistance from the Quebec government

Montreal, Quebec, February 13, 2009 – Ranaz Corporation (“Ranaz”) (TSX-V: RNZ) announced today that it will soon transfer production of its nutritional bars from BarTech in Michigan to its facility in St-Eustache, Quebec.

The Company has taken this decision in light of the economic situation and financial crisis in the United States, which has prevented it from expanding the plant as planned last October. This decision will enable Ranaz to centralize its manufacturing activities under one roof and thus benefit from synergies and annual savings estimated at $500,000. The integration plan calls for the start-up of a nutritional bar production line in the second quarter of 2009.

The Company will receive non-refundable financial assistance of nearly $200,000 from the Quebec government through a Ministry of Economic Development, Innovation and Export Trade program.

“In this economic climate, we must optimize our operations as best we can,” said Jean Bourassa-Marineau, President and Founder of Ranaz. “The transfer of our bar production is in line with the goals we set last October of improved profitability and sound financial management of our assets. I would like to thank the Quebec government and its personnel for their attention and support for this project. We are also awaiting a favourable decision from the Canadian government regarding additional financial assistance.”

The Company will continue to enjoy the solid expertise of Joseph Bachmore, President of BarTech (USA), who will oversee market development for private labels and other Ranaz products in the United States.
